Industrial Commission Holds Hearings at Elon University School of Law

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Raleigh, N.C. – On October 25, 2017, a Full Commission panel of the North Carolina Industrial Commission held hearings at the Elon University School of Law in Greensboro. The hearings took place in the law school’s Robert E. Long Courtroom, and were well attended by students and faculty. Following the hearings, Commissioners and attorneys took questions from students about the Commission’s work and workers’ compensation law.

“On behalf of the Commission, I would thank the faculty and students of the Elon University School of Law for hosting our panel,” said Charlton Allen, Chairman of the North Carolina Industrial Commission.

The event at the Elon University School of Law was part of the Industrial Commission’s ongoing outreach initiative to provide students at the State’s law schools the opportunity to observe and learn about North Carolina’s workers’ compensation system.
